

New Approaches & Materials to Manage the Pulp of Immature Permanent Teeth

Featuring: Kenneth M. Hargreaves, DDS, PhD

FRIDAY, APRIL 13, 2018

UNC
SCHOOL OF DENTISTRY

LOCATION: The William and Ida Friday Center for Continuing Education

*Sponsored by the University of North Carolina
Department of Pediatric Dentistry and the Department of Endodontics*

Course Description

Considerable excitement exists for developing dental applications that preserve the pulp-dentin complex of immature permanent teeth. Such procedures include direct and indirect pulp capping procedure as well as regenerative procedures that employ post-natal stem cells and invoke concepts of tissue engineering. This course will describe the current status of regenerative endodontic procedures, their potential and predictors of healing success. Both clinical and basic studies will be reviewed to provide you with the latest information with an emphasis on practical steps to apply these procedures in treating selected patients.

Educational Objectives

Upon completion of this course, participants should be able to:

1. Describe the three major steps in tissue engineering and how they apply to regenerating the pulp-dentin complex.
2. Recognize the clinical principles needed for regenerative endodontic procedures.
3. Describe clinical outcomes of successful regenerative endodontic procedures.
4. Describe and discuss the indications, contraindications and approaches for pulp capping and regenerative procedures.

About the Speaker

Kenneth M. Hargreaves received his BA in Neurobiology from the University of California at Berkeley in 1977, his DDS from Georgetown University in Washington, DC, in 1983, and his PhD in Physiology from the Uniformed Services University of Health Sciences in Bethesda, MD, in 1986. From 1986 to 1990, he was a Staff Fellow and Senior Staff Fellow at the Neurobiology and Anesthesiology Branch of the National Institute of Dental Research (now NIDCR) at the NIH. He completed his residency in Endodontics at the University of Minnesota in 1993 and is a Diplomate of the American Board of Endodontics. Dr. Hargreaves is currently professor and chair of the Department of Endodontics, and professor in the Department of Pharmacology, Department of Physiology, and Department of Surgery at UT Health San Antonio. He also maintains a private practice limited to endodontics.
